I. Introduction

This is the 11th report published by SNHR in its continued updates on the attacks that are carried out by the international coalition forces and left civilian casualties or targeted vital civil facilities.

Led by the United States, international coalition forces entered Syria on 23 September 2014 to fight ISIS and operated without publicly siding with any of the conflict parties until the end of 2015 when they started to support and side with the Kurdish-majority Self-management forces, which consist primarily of the Democratic Union Party forces, a branch for the Kurdistan Workers’ Party, under the pretext of fighting ISIS. These forces, however, fought and took over areas that were formerly under the control of the Syrian opposition factions which was the case in Tal Ref’at and the surrounding areas.

Supporting a group within any given society will establish for and lead to a long-term social quarrel and make the other components of this society see this group as a traitor foe as well as anyone supporting this group. What makes this worse is the enforced-displacement crimes which the Democratic Union Party are committing on an ethnic basis. To a great extent, this is similar to the Iranian Support for Hezbollah and might even be much worse considering that Hezbollah never declared any separatist intention.
International coalition forces have perpetrated many massacres and incidents of killing of civilians in ISIS-held areas where apparently they operated on false field-information as it was shown in past reports and also in this report.

A considerable segment of the rebels wishes for a foreign intervention to get rid of the ruling Assad regime and they have an equal desire to get rid of ISIS who killed, displaced, and violated many of their rights. Nonetheless, the international coalition forces have made many grave mistakes – most notably bombing civilians and in some cases members of armed opposition factions and, secondly, siding with a separatist component, and, lastly, choosing not to target the Syrian regime forces who are the main responsible for 95% of the entirety of the crimes that occurred since March 2011. All of these faults impeded the protection of civilians from the daily killing and displacement. It has become quite well-known that the intervention against ISIS wasn’t for the sake of protecting the Syrian people from their brutalities but rather to protect the states that intervened from the danger of ISIS, or anything resembling the group, spreading and reaching these states.

Fadel Abdul Ghani, chairman of SNHR, says:

“The international coalition will not be able to defeat ISIS even if they lost all of their lands as long as there are existent producers which are, primarily, the oppressive regimes that dedicate the state’s resources to demean their people and stand behind sectarian and bloodthirsty slogans. Even a military success won’t be possible unless social segments (and not sectarian or ethnic) were involved in the fight against ISIS.”
II. Executive Summary and Methodology

This report highlights 46 incidents in which international coalition forces targeted vital objects and facilities. There were 28 incidents, out of the 46, that resulted in civilian casualties between Thursday 4 February 2016 and Wednesday 12 October 2016. The most notable incident was in Al Toukhar village, affiliated to Manbej city, where 98 civilians have fallen including 59 children and 27 women.

Based on the incidents included in past reports and the newly added ones in this report in addition to the separate incidents that we recorded where one or two people were killed, the total number of victims who were killed in international location attacks from the beginning of the intervention on 23 September 2016 to 12 October 2016 is 649 individuals distributed as follows:

- 639 civilians including 244 children and 132 women.
- 10 members of armed opposition

This report is the outcome of cumulative, ongoing, and daily monitoring processes by SNHR team where we followed-up on the incidents and spoke to survivors, victims’ families, and eyewitnesses. We have explained the purpose of the interviews to the witnesses who gave us permission to use the provided information in this report which includes five accounts.

Also, we have reviewed pictures and videos and verified their authenticity where these pictures showed the huge destruction that resulted from the bombardment by the international coalition forces in some civil areas while other pictures showed children’s and women’s dead bodies. We have copies of all the videos and pictures mentioned in this report.

This report only represents the bare minimum of the actual magnitude and severity of the violations that occurred. It also doesn’t cover the social, economic, and psychological ramifications.

IV. Conclusions and Recommendations
• The indiscriminate and disproportionate bombardments are an explicit breach to the international humanitarian law. Additionally, the indiscriminate acts of killing amount to war crimes.
• Aerial bombardment has caused collateral damages that involved loss of lives, injuries, and significant damages to civil facilities. There are strong indicators suggesting that the damage was too excessive compared to the anticipated military benefit.

Recommendations
• International Coalition forces have to respect the international humanitarian law and the customary international law. Therefore, the states of the coalition bear the responsibly for the violations that have been perpetrated since the beginning of the strikes where this reports monitors some of these violations. The states have to bear the consequences of all these violations and make every possible effort to avoid a reoccurrence.
• States of coalition have to explicitly and clearly confess that some of the air-strikes have resulted in innocent civilian casualties. Denying so won’t benefit these government as there are documented human rights reports and residents’ account that fully expose that. Instead, these states should launch serious investigations and compensate the victims and the affected as soon as possible.

- Civilians in Syria must be protected from the brutality and savagery of the Syrian regime and the extremist militias that are fighting by the regime’s side. A no-fly zone must be enforced on the warplanes that are dropping tens of barrel bombs every day in parallel with protecting the civilians in Syria from the brutality of ISIS.

Acknowledgment

Our thanks and condolences for the families and local activists who majorly enriched these investigations.
