I. Introduction
Arbitrary arrests have been made in Syria on a daily basis since the start of the popular uprising for democracy in March 2011, with many people arrested simply for exercising one of their basic rights cited in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights such as the right to freedom of opinion and expression, or being denied a fair trial after being detained without any ruling by an independent judicial entity ordering their detention, or being arrested without being charged with any offence or provided with an attorney, or being detained after their punishment had ended. In most cases, arbitrarily detained individuals are subjected to solitary confinement for several months or sometimes for years, if not indefinitely, at official and unofficial detention centers. In itself, detention is not considered a violation of human rights until it becomes arbitrary, as stated by international instruments, such as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights – Article 9 states: “No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile.” while Article 9 (1) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights states: “Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person. No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest or detention. No one shall be deprived of his liberty except on such grounds and in accordance with such procedure as are established by law.”

New incidents of arbitrary arrest are documented almost every day. The Syrian regime was the first party to practice this violation in a systematic manner against the various segments of the Syrian people, with the Syrian regime using mafia-like methods, making most arrests without a legal warrant while the victim is passing through a checkpoint or during raids. Torture starts the moment the detainee is arrested, and he is deprived of any mean to contact his family or attorney. Also, authorities deny even having made these arbitrary arrests, and most detainees become forcibly disappeared persons.
The Syrian regime is responsible for no fewer than 87 percent of all the arbitrary arrests that we have documented. In most cases, victims' families are unable to accurately identify the entity that made the arrest, taking into account the vast array of forces affiliated with the Syrian regime (Iranian militias, the Lebanese group Hezbollah, and others), in addition to the four main security agencies and their many branches, all of which are authorized to arrest, torture, and commit the crimes of enforced disappearance.

Despite all the negotiations, agreements, and Cessation of Hostilities statements issued over the course of the Syrian conflict, it is clear that the issue of detainees is almost the only issue that has yet to see any progress. In this regard, we recommend the following:

1- Arbitrary arrests must be ceased immediately as this is still an ongoing concern according to SNHR's monthly report. All detainees’ fates must be revealed and their families’ right to visit them must also be ensured immediately.
2- All detainees imprisoned for merely exercising their political and civil rights must be released unconditionally. The use of women and children as prisoners of war must be stopped and they all must be released.
3- The independent international monitors of the Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic, which was established by the UN, and the International Committee of the Red Cross must be granted access to all official and non-official detention centers without establishing any prior arrangements or any restrictions or conditions.
4- A UN committee should be formed to attend to the release of the detainees periodically and according to a timetable that must be presented by all the detaining parties, primarily the Syrian regime forces that are responsible for 87 percent of all the detainees.
5- Suspend and repeal all rulings issued by the field military courts and terrorism courts, which are non-compliant with domestic and international legislation, as well as guarantees of a fair trial.

Methodology
This report documents the record of arbitrary arrests by the parties to the conflict in December. Additionally, this report monitors the most notable raid and checkpoints that resulted in detentions, in addition to shedding light on the most notable individual cases and incidents of arbitrary arrest that took place in December.
The SNHR team abides by strict standards in order to evaluate and determine any incident of arbitrary arrests and to avoid any faults in recording any incidents of detention, imprisonment, or deprivation of freedom in accordance with the international laws and the aforementioned set of principles on arbitrary arrest. The Detainee and Forcibly-Disappeared Department at SNHR records cases of arrest that they collect from various sources, such as: victims’ families, SNHR members in Syrian governorates, cooperating local activists, and former detainees, before diligently working to contact the families of the detainees and forcibly disappeared persons, as well as people close to them and people who survived detention, for the purpose of collecting as much information and data as possible, in light of extraordinarily and extremely complex challenges. We also record eyewitnesses’ accounts and track cases of arrest to update these records regularly in order to discover the fate of a detainee, their place of detention, and the circumstances of their arrest.

The ongoing daily process of documenting detainees comes with additional challenges for SNHR, which has been documenting detainees since 2011. One of these most notable challenges is the reluctance of victims’ families to cooperate and reveal and document any information on their family members’ arrest even secretly, especially if the arrested individual was a female due to a well-founded fear still prevalent in Syrian society that being discovered doing so would result in more torture and further danger for their loved ones and themselves. Instead, families try to negotiate with security forces which usually blackmail these families and demand cash payments, effectively ransoms, that can amount to thousands of dollars in some cases. Despite the fact that SNHR possesses lists of more than 140,850 detainees, including children and women, we can safely say that our estimate of the actual number of detainees exceeds 215,000.

The failure of the international community and of all the organs of the United Nations to apply pressure on the Syrian authorities to release even one individual (including those whose sentences are completed), even prisoners of conscience, has affirmed the conviction of many within Syrian society that it is useless to cooperate in the documentation process. Most of the releases achieved were part of exchange deals with the armed opposition.
The detainee figures included in this report don’t include prisoners with a criminal background and include cases of arrest that are based on the internal armed conflict, mainly due to opposition activity against the ruling authorities. The increasing number of arrests is attributable to a number of reasons:

• Many arrested individuals weren’t arrested in connection with any crime, but because of their relatives’ involvement with armed opposition factions or because they provided humanitarian aid.

• Most of the arrests are conducted randomly and involve people who weren’t involved in the popular protests, in the provision of relief, or even in military activity.

• Thousands of detainees are still being detained by the Syrian regime despite judicial orders for their release having been issued due to the bureaucracy, corruption, slowness, and ineffectiveness which the Syrian judiciary suffers from.

• Syrian regime forces control densely populated cities such as the main central cities and continue to practice systematic policies of arbitrary arrests against the civilians of these areas.

• Many entities affiliated with Syrian regime forces are authorized to make arrests, with many of these entities making arrests without first checking with Syrian regime forces or the judicial authorities to which these entities are affiliated. Also, these entities have their own list of detention centers that are not subject to any judicial supervision. The detainees inside these detention centers are not being treated in accordance with the stated Syrian laws.

• A great number of cases are driven by blackmail or sectarian grudges, especially in unstable areas that are not controlled by a specific faction or which are subject to a power struggle. As a result, many of the armed militias that have emerged can’t be monitored as they don’t answer to any particular group.

II. December Outline

The Syrian Regime forces in December continued with their campaigns of prosecution and arrest focusing primarily on civilians and former armed opposition fighters in the areas that had signed settlement agreements with Syrian Regime forces. Our monitoring also confirmed that Syrian Regime forces arrested some of the previously forcibly displaced civilians who returned from north Syria to their hometowns as part of these settlement agreements. In addition, Syrian regime forces launched a sweeping arrest campaign in December against individuals who had returned from neighboring countries who should supposedly have been protected by the amnesty laws and reconciliation offers established by the regime, particularly in Damascus Suburbs and Daraa governorates.
In December, we recorded an increase in the rates of kidnappings for ransom by Syrian Regime forces’ security apparatuses, particularly by personnel of the Air Force Intelligence and Military Intelligence forces. These abductions were concentrated in the cities of Hama, Latakia, and Homs, and particularly targeted women and children.

Syrian Regime forces, throughout the month of December, continued with their policies of pursuing civilians from families of activists involved in the popular uprising for democracy and of fighters of factions of the Armed Opposition in areas under their control, as well as targeting individuals affiliated with factions of the Armed Opposition, with SNHR documenting the Syrian Regime forces carrying out campaigns of raids and arrests that targeted entire families related to members of factions of the Armed Opposition. These arrests, which included women and children, were concentrated in the cities of Hama, Latakia, and Homs. Meanwhile, Self-Management forces continued enforcing their policies of arbitrary arrest and enforced disappearance throughout the month of December, targeting political activists and members of civil society groups who oppose their ideological views. These arrests were concentrated in Hasaka and Raqqa governorates. Additionally, Self-Management forces continued their policy of arbitrary arrest for the purpose of conscription.

In addition to these incidents, December also saw the arrests of members of civil society groups by Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham, whose members also continue to pursue and arrest armed opposition fighters belonging to factions affiliated with the Euphrates Shield and Olive Branch operation rooms, with these arrests being concentrated in the southern suburbs of Idlib governorate and the northern suburbs of Hama governorate.

Factions of the Armed Opposition, meanwhile, continued making arrests in the territories under their control, which were concentrated in Aleppo governorate, and particularly Afrin city, throughout the month of November.

VI. Recommendations

Security Council
Monitor the implementation of Resolution 2042, adopted on April 14, 2012, Resolution 2043, adopted on April 21, 2012, and Resolution 2139, adopted on 22 February, 2014, all of which demand the immediate cessation of the crime of enforced disappearance.
Human Rights Council
- Follow up on the issue of detainees and forcibly disappeared persons in Syria and shed light on this issue in all annual meetings.
- Cooperate and coordinate with all active local human rights groups in Syria.

Commission of Inquiry (COI)
Launch investigations into the cases included in this report and previous reports. SNHR is willing to cooperate and provide more evidence and data.

International, Impartial, and Independent Mechanism (IIIM)
Address the cases mentioned in this report and past reports. SNHR is willing to cooperate and provide more evidence and data.

United Nations and the guarantors in Astana talks
- An impartial special committee should be formed to monitor cases of enforced disappearance, and make progress in revealing the fate of the nearly 95,000 documented missing persons in Syria, approximately 86% of whom are detained by the Syrian regime.
- Immediately start applying pressure on all parties to ensure that they immediately reveal their detention records according to a timetable. In the meantime, detention places should be revealed immediately, and humanitarian organizations and the International Committee of the Red Cross should be allowed to visit them directly.
- Release children and women, and stop holding families and friends as war hostages.
- We call on the official who was newly appointed to take charge of the detainee file at the UN special envoy office to include the issue of the detainees issue in the upcoming round of Geneva talks, as this issue is of far greater importance to the Syrian people than other longer-term issues that can be jointly addressed later by the parties after a political settlement is reached, such as the constitution.
